At United Therapeutics, tucked away inside, is a lot of magic. "GOOD YEAR UTHR, good year by far."

And to all the familiar things in the successful biotech company – to the picture of the ten directors running projectors, to the pipeline and the top line, to the creative sparks and the product trademarks, to everything one by one – the magic of 2012 at United Therapeutics is revealed.

In this classic of annual reports, beloved by generations of stakeholders, the quiet poetry of what United Therapeutics achieved in 2012 and the vibrant illustrations combine to make a perfect annual report to celebrate the end of the year.

Dear Shareholder,

2012 has been a terrific year for United Therapeutics. Each of our three approved products has grown in sales. One of them, Adcirca®, has become the most prescribed medicine for pulmonary arterial hypertension (PAH). The other two, Remodulin® and Tyvaso®, are respectively the most prescribed infusion and inhalation medicines for PAH. We expect continued growth in sales of all three products because of either new drug delivery technology (such as our implantable pump for Remodulin), or favorable medical data (such as reports of successful transitions of patients to Adcirca and Tyvaso).

Along with growing sales have come growing profits and profit margins. Our focus on PAH enables operating synergies that reduce spending as a percentage of revenues.

Our stock price is depressed compared to what it could be because of concerns about our ongoing patent litigation against a generic company and skepticism the FDA will approve our pipeline of oral prostacyclin analog therapies for PAH. We are working hard to achieve victories that will remove the doubts and skepticism, thereby enabling a more robust appraisal of our strong core business.

We continue to add to our pipeline. This year we in-licensed a once-daily subcutaneous injection technology for treprostinil and beraprost that has the potential to double our current $400M+ revenue rate from Remodulin. The new technology has a patent estate potentially extending to 2032.

We enter 2013 as a lean, mean organization. Our revenue per employee, about $1.5 million, is the 2nd highest of all top 20 US biotech companies (ranked by market cap). Our products lead in each of their market segments. Our Freedom-EV clinical trial for oral treprostinil in combination with other therapies – a multi-billion dollar market potential – spans the globe. Our R&D efforts to get each and every PAH patient on a United Therapeutics therapy are relentless.

We have so aggressively returned value to shareholders via stock buybacks which we started in the fourth quarter of 2011 and continued through 2012 that we have now retired about 20% of outstanding shares.

In short, United Therapeutics is what being a great biotech company is all about.

Onward!

About the artist

Jonathan Meader's artwork has been widely shown and is in some major museum collections. His two published books are: The Wordless Travel Book, and In Praise of Women. He studied ancient Egyptian symbolism for the last two decades, and made many trips to Egypt. Meader and his wife Barbara Demeter are completing a book that identifies, for the first time, the sources and/or meanings of more than 50 ancient Egyptian symbols, including 12 major crowns. Most of the symbols are based on the internal structures of the two Ancient Egyptian Sacred Waterlilies - the Blue and the White. Andrew Weil writes: "Meader and Demeter have made remarkable discoveries, that once seen, are completely obvious."
